

POSITIVE PICTURE FOR JOB-SEEKERS IN NORTHERN HIRE-LAND

HIRING INTENTIONS IN NORTHERN IRELAND DIPPED FROM LAST QUARTER BUT STILL REMAIN STRONG

- Employment Outlook of +5% for Northern Ireland
- Brexit uncertainty impacting hiring intentions
- Temporary market slowing, especially for summer holiday jobs

14 JUNE 2016: Northern Ireland's jobs market has dropped slightly from last quarter's eight-year high but remains in positive territory at +5%, according to Manpower, the world's workforce experts. Last quarter saw the region recover from several subdued quarters, with an Outlook of +7% and, while this quarter has seen a slight fall in optimism, the region still manages to match the national average NEO of +5%.

The Manpower Employment Outlook Survey is based on responses from 2,110 UK employers. It asks whether employers intend to hire additional workers or reduce the size of their workforce in the coming quarter. It is the most comprehensive, forward-looking employment survey of its kind and is used as a key economic statistic by both the Bank of England and the UK government.

Amanda White, Operations Manager at Manpower, said: "I am pleased that last quarter's strong showing was not just a one-off and, although we have seen a small decline, Northern Ireland is still in firmly positive territory. From speaking to employers over the last few months, uncertainty over the outcome of the EU referendum is one of the reasons behind this dip in hiring intentions."

"We have seen a noticeable slowdown in the temporary recruitment market, in particular. For example, many companies are choosing to target students directly for temp work over the summer holiday period."

"Last quarter, we flagged a need for customer service representatives in the region's call centres. We are still recruiting in this sector but call centre and sales roles have declined overall. The area where specific skills are really needed is for technical roles within engineering, but it's often rare to find these specific expertise in the region."

Manpower today warns that a British exit from the European Union could leave businesses facing a critical talent shortage, with EU workers no longer able to move freely to the UK. The national seasonally adjusted Net Employment Outlook has fallen 1% for the second successive quarter to +5%. This second successive fall shows that, while there is still a strong requirement for new workers, overall businesses' hiring intentions appear to have been hit by Brexit uncertainty.

James Hick, ManpowerGroup Solutions Managing Director: "Employment in the UK is at an all-time high, but British businesses continue to create more jobs. Britain added 404,000 jobs in the last 12 months alone, and despite the uncertainties of Brexit, employers tell us they still need more workers. Make no mistake about the vital contribution EU workers make to Britain. There are currently 2.2m people from the EU working in the UK, but not all of them will stay here in the long term and we need the opportunity to replace the skills they bring. Britain today is a magnet for international talent, from finance to tech to the NHS. Leaving the EU will make it much more difficult to attract the brightest and best. It will mean more bureaucracy for those coming to Britain and salaries could be less competitive, especially if sterling falls, as many warn it could – including the Bank of England. To compete on the world stage British businesses need the flexibility and free movement that EU membership brings.”

For the second successive quarter every region of the country reports a positive Outlook. The West Midlands and Wales are the most positive regions (+11%) followed by the North East (+10%) and the East and East Midlands (both +9%). Outside the North East, the Northern Powerhouse has struggled with the North West matching the national average (+5%) and Yorkshire & Humberside reporting the least optimistic Outlook of the country (+1%). Optimism across the South of England has fallen, with London down two points to +7%, the South East down one point to +3%, and the South West, the biggest faller, down ten points to +1%. Scotland (+3%) records a fall of three points.

NOTES TO EDITORS

A 'Net Employment Outlook' is calculated by subtracting those employers who plan to reduce staffing levels from those who plan to hire staff. A positive result indicates that more employers plan to increase rather than decrease staffing levels; a negative result reflects the opposite. [% increase - % decrease]

Commentary is based on seasonally adjusted data where available. Full survey results for each of the 42 countries and territories included in this quarter's survey, plus regional and global comparisons, can be found in the ManpowerGroup Press Room at www.manpowergroup.com/meos. Note that in Quarter 2 2008, the Survey adopted the TRAMO-SEATS model for seasonal adjustment of data. As a result, you may notice some seasonally adjusted data points change slightly from previous reports. This model is recommended by the Eurostat department of the European Union and the European Central Bank, and is widely used internationally.

About the Survey

The world leader in innovative workforce solutions, ManpowerGroup releases the Manpower Employment Outlook Survey quarterly to measure employers' intentions to increase or decrease the number of employees in their workforce during the next quarter. It is the longest running, most extensive, forward-looking employment survey in the world, polling nearly 59,000 employers in 42 countries and territories. The survey serves as a bellwether of labour market trends and activities and is regularly used to inform the Bank of England's Inflation Reports, as well as a regular data source for the European Commission, informing its EU Employment Situation and Social Outlook report the Monthly Monitor. ManpowerGroup's independent survey data is also sourced by financial analysts and economists around the world to help determine where labour markets are headed.
